Senator Bacon apparently speaking for the Democrats, intimated to the Republicans that if the Republicans would permit the passage of a proper campaign publicity bill, they would not attempt to filibuster against the currency bill. Senator Beveridge promptly said from the Republican side that ne would be very glad to acquiesce in such an arrangement. The Democrats, of course, want such a bill as the original McCall measure without the provision for reduction of Southern representation or Federal control of elections.

Senator Teiler took the floor to talk about the publicity bill and made a vigorous attack on the measure. The chamber was well filled and it soon become apparent that the Democrats were determined to prevnt any measure passing on this subject unless it be one to their liking.

After an hour's debate the House passed the pass form of the emergency currency bill by a vote of 165 to 140. The Democrats claimed that the House conferees, who had inveighed against the Aldrich bill, had at last accepted that measure. The Republicans described it as a compromise, containing features of the Vreeland and Aldrich bills. Minority Leader Williams spoke against the bill, calling it Mr. Cannon's political emergency bill.

Those who spoke against the bill were Minority Leader Williams and Representatives Pulo, Glass, Ollie James, McHenry, and Cockran. Its defenders were Representatives Burton of Ohlo, Vreeland, Weeks, and Lovering.

The necessary co-operation of these two great natural resources may be brought about by mutual agreement or treaty between our country and Canada or perhaps by thoroughly considered and well-safeguarded legislation.
